Exhibition Strook 'It's only a matter of time'

"I have noticed how concrete memories and feelings constantly diminish and crumble. Time eats away at them, just like it eats away at an old piece of wood. My memories become a mental construction, a monument that I have created inside my own head."

- Strook

Stefaan De Croock (°1982), alias Strook, is a contemporary Belgian artist. He obtained a master's degree in the visual arts at the Sint-Lucas School of Art in Ghent. Since then, he has been pushing his artistic boundaries further and further, both literally and figuratively. His increasingly layered and meaningful collages, sculptures, installations and paintings have already been exhibited to wide international acclaim in Stockholm, Miami, Bangkok, Montreal and Mexico City.

The central theme of his oeuvre can be summarised in the single word 'time', a phenomenon that has always inspired Strook. This is evident in, amongst other things, his choice of raw materials. Within the framework of 'Mind the Artist', the arts festival organised by Musea Brugge, Stefaan went in search of patinated materials that he found in and around various heritage locations in Bruges. In this way, the city's rich historical past forms the basis for several new installations and works of art.

In his eyes, there is something magical about old and weathered materials. They exude a kind of spontaneity that it is impossible to reproduce. The colours, the paint, the relief,... Together, they create an aesthetic footprint of everything the material has ever experienced. You can literally see 'time' incorporated into its substance. For the artist, it is a privilege to work with such materials.

SAMPLES OF HISTORICAL LOCATIONS

For this exhibition, Strook is making new work that will be displayed at three historical locations in Bruges: the Onze-Lieve-Vrouwekerk, the attic of the medieval Sint-Janshospitaal and the Groeningemuseum. He wants to capture the invisible history of these places and absorb it into his art. With this in mind, he has made plaster casts of parts of the floor in all three buildings. This allowed him to 'sample' the patina and the soul of these three locations, where countless people pass every day almost without thinking. The casts have resulted in a work in ceramics: a portrait into which the centuries' old stories of the locations have - quite literally - been fused.

In the Groeningemuseum, Strook confronts his new work with the stately portraits of the museum's permanent collection. For the first time, the artist is using a large piece of marble as an element in one of his own portraiture pieces. This material reflects the pomp and splendour that the museum's portraits exude. Yet at the same time, marble - like weathered wood - contains traces that reveal the passage of time, which in the case of this natural material dates back millions of years, which immediately places the 'eternal value' of the noblemen in the museum's paintings in a different perspective. The material even questions our human existence in the light of history.

MONUMENTAL WORK IN THE O.L.V.-KERK

The insignificance of human beings is also the subject of the site-specific 'head' that Strook has made for the Onze-Lieve-Vrouwekerk. He depicts an ordinary person, but on a monumental scale. The serenity and introspective posture of the portrait matches the sacred nature of the location. However, he enlarges the nothingness and fragility of everyday human existence into a relief figure that is no less than 3.4 metres high. This creates a striking contrast with the interior of this Catholic church, where a format of that size is only used for huge biblical paintings or sculptures of the saints that are intended to inspire awe and deep respect.

In the attic of the Sint-Janshospitaal Strook plans to exhibit a number of free-standing sculptures, such as 'One More Day IV' and 'One More Day V'; steel display cases with mat glass, in which a bust - made from recuperated wooden slats - seems to disappear. This mat-glass shell around the figure not only creates distance between the sculpture and the viewers, but also makes a true 'meeting' impossible. From afar, you can see the contours of a figure, but as you move closer the figures fade and are transformed into unreachable wraiths, like a fata morgana of memory.

Strook shows in his work how everything is transitory, especially when the weight of time starts to press down on it. Time is not tangible. You cannot hold it in your hands; you can only give expression to it. In this way, you can regard Strook's art as a kind of mental architecture that brings together a collection of receding remembrances and thoughts. His works are pieces of a distorted reality, collages of imaginary ruins. Mental spaces and monuments to memories that are slowly fading.

"People sometimes say that my heads exude a certain sacrality. I see it like this: whoever looks at my work is contemplating the invincibility of time and the nothingness of mankind."

Mind the Artist

The unexpectedly long duration of the corona crisis has turned the entire cultural sector on its head. Artists are hit especially hard. With 'Mind the Artist' Musea Brugge invests for a year in the remarkably versatile and creative talent that our country possesses. Musea Brugge connects artists from every possible discipline - including photographers, authors, visual artists or musicians - with its existing museum collections.

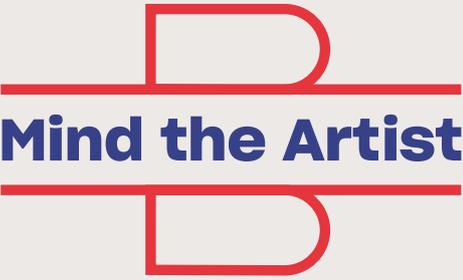

A number of artistic centres have even programmed a takeover in one or more museum locations. Discover everything you need to know about this inspirational dialogue between contemporary art and old(er) art on
